To the Sovereigne MAIESTY
OF THE
Parliament of the English Republike,
(by the grace of God)

Keepers of the Liberties of England;
Protectors of the true Christian Faith, and (within their Territories) Assertors of all the just Priviledges of the Humane Nature, against the Usurpations of Domestick and Forraigne Tyrants, &c.

AND, ALSO,
To the Right Honourable Councell of STATE, established by their Authority.

THE praise of God, and of praise-worthy Men;
Are proper subjects of the Poets pen;
And they, of old (though disesteem'd of late)
Had power heroick-titles to create;
Or, Attributes of Honor, to confer
Where, Worth, most eminently, did appear;
And, none, have been more glorious under Heaven;
Then those, which they, deservedly, have given:
No, not those high-priz'd Attributes, with which The Pope his Royall-Vassalls did enrich:
For, this Power, they enjoyed, long before popes were; so shall, when they must be no more
And, of their Holinessse, had thus much odd-
That, ere they could make

Such as they were ; and heretofore great Kings
Ambitious were, of their Canonizings.

But though impostors use to make a shew,
With counterfeited Jewells, mine, are true ;
And this, now being a Triumphall-day,
Expecting all things in their best array,
My Muse, in her Addresses you salutes,
With such New-titles, and high attributes,
As none have yet ascrib'd ; that, I may shew
To others, what I know to be your due.

For (though your Justice, and your Mercie be The Essence of your Glorie) Wisemen, see,
That, these are accidents which do belong
To Power ; and, which, may help to make it strong,
And, should not be refus'd, when they are brought
By other men, and by your selves unsought :
Nor, will they judged be, to overswell
A modest height to him that heedeth well,
What is, in Petty-States, ascrib'd to them,
Who are invested with a Power-Supream.

But these, are but a Preface to my gift ;
Which, I present, out of a nobler drift,
Than by these Circumstances can appear ;
For they meer Harbengers, or Ushers are Unto that Trophie wherewith I assay
To imp, the Publick-duties of this day :
And help to magnifie his glorious Name,
To whom, your Piety devotes the same.
Yea, these high Titles are not fixed here,
To make you great, in your own eyes, appear ;
But, honourable, in the sight of those
In whom your just commands you shall impose ;
To be viewed as Remembrancers,
That high trust, which God on you confers.
If to serve sinister ends you take them,
The titles of dishonour make them.

As largely, and as well, as my weak-wit,
(My leasure and the short time) would permit,
I offer, here, a brief commem'rative,
Of those things, for which, Thanks, this day we give:
That, to Gods praise, they may be thought upon,
When this our short Solemnity is done:
That, unborn children, may commemorate
His Mercies in the birth, of this new State,
When they shall read, by what throws, rent and torn
The mother was, before it could be born:
And, that, by knowing, what their Freedoms cost,
They may not let them carelessly, be lost:
Or, be unthankfull, as now many are,
And, thereby, in that blessing, lose their share.

In lofty strains, I do not strive to sing,
But, in a plain song, humbly forth to bring
Such Charmes, as profitably may be read,
By those, who of my Counsell, have most need;
And, such, as may be usefull, to expell
Those evill spirits which amongst us dwell,
To interrupt the setting of that Peace,
Which brings an universall happiness.

I owe a thanks to God; and thanks to you;
And though I cannot pay the half that's due,
Where least I owe; I, truly, have afraid
That, of a great debt, somewhat might be paid.
Despise it not, therefore, though much it lacks
Of what should be. Quench not the smoking flax;
Break not the bruised Reed. But, acceptation
Vouchsafe, to this imperfect Presentation;
And, as I shall deserve it; so, let me
Preserved in your good opinion be.

G. W.

TO
The VVel-affected of the Common-wealth of ENGLAND.

VVHen the late Act of Parliament came forth, commanding the celebration of a publick Thanksgiving, upon the 30. of January last, for Gods manifold mercies to this Republick; and for those especially in the said Act expressed: though my own affairs were at that time in their crisis, and my urgent necessities required their immediate prosecution: yet my heart being moved with a strong desire to prepare somewhat (according to my faculty) which might help stir up this Nation, to glorifie almighty God for our manifold and great Deliverances; as was piously enjoyned by Supreme Authority: I resolved to trust him with my own businessse; and, wholly to set apart the remainder of that Moneth to compose a Commemorative Poem toward the illustration of his extraordinary favours to this Common-wealth, in his glorious goings forth with our Armies; and in such other manifestations of his gracious Providence, as have conduced to the accomplishing of our just, and reasonable hopes. And, though I have not therein answered what may perhaps be expected in such an undertaking; yet having done what my ability and the shortnesse of the time (made shorter by many accidentall obstructions) would permit; I hope you will favourably excuse me, in regard it may neverthelesse, be in some usefull to the better performance of the Du- ty unded after the Day is past, by bringing to remembrance many of those mercies which occasioned that that dayes solemnization ; and I presume, it will will find good acceptation with you, whose eyes God hath opened to see his wonderfull loving kind-nesse, and, whose hearts are not hardened to their destruction, or shame, for shutting their eyes, wilfully, against the light, which heretofore shined upon them.

I have no hope to prevail upon such, as are perverse : for like Jannes and Jambres, they have obsti-nately opposed our deliverers ; and have equallled the Egyptians in resisting God. They have sometimes acknowledged his Finger in the miracles, wrought for us ; as that people did, and yet persist in their obduracy. They, have seen the Rods of power and discipline, turned into Serpents ; and that which was in the hand of Lawfull authority, to devour those, which were grasped by impostors. They have seen, as the E- gyptians did, their Lakes, ponds, and Rivers, turned into blood : and all their fields, waters, and habitati-tions filled with those, which were hieroglyphically signified by Frogs, Lice, Flyes and Locusts. God, in like manner, hath proved them, by his judgements, and by plagues, upon their beasts, their fruits, their treasures, their persons, and their hopes of posterity : he hath punished them, as well with a gross darknes, and other privations, as by arming against them, all the Elements. They have seen their late King (for continuing in his hardnesse of heart) like Pharaoh, drowned (as it were) in the Red Sea, even in that sea of blood, which by his wilfulness hath overflowed these Islands. Yea they see those waters which gave passage for his people, to escape their ry, stand on both hands ready to swallow up ; yet they being more blind and mad Pharaoh and the Egyptians (because, then for examples) the purposes, as in despite of God, and will not acknowledge his Actings, though they see them; nor his Voice, though they bear it; nor his hand though they feel it: Now, if all these things have not softened their hearts; and if neither the Pillar of fire which they see going daily before us, nor the Cloud, out of which God looks often very terribly upon them, can move them to praise God with us, in our publick acknowledgements of his mercies; I must not think my sharres will operate much upon them: and, therefore, to Gods good pleasure, I will leave them, and you, who are better affected, to the enjoyment of his mercies; whereof I humbly expect and confidently believe to be a partaker.

Your faithfull, and ancient Remembrancer,

GEO. WITHER.

[1]

The British Appeales, with Gods mercifull Replies, on the be- half of the Commonwealth of England, &c.

The Argument.

The Muse, begins, with filiall fear,
To raise a joyfull trophie, here.
The differences, doth expresse
'Twixt formall, and true thankfulness.
Brings out those mercies to your view,
For which our praisefull thanks are due.
Warns, all men, timely, to take heed,
What, God hath done; and may succeed,
To those, that will not understand
The work which he hath now in hand.
Then after some thanksgiving-songs,
Informs, what further, yet belongs
To thankfulness, and open layes

MY soul, in honour of th' Eternall King,
Of judgement, and of Mercy now shal sing:
Of Mercies, and of judgements, and, again,
Of Mercies, that they may not be in vain;

And that out of my poverty, I may
Add to the publick offerings of this Day,
A supplement, to fill up vacant places;
To fill up, extraordinary Graces.
To make us mindfull, what is further due;
To keep sheedfull, what may else ensue,
And perfect that, which others have begun;
Concerning what, the Lord of Hosts, hath, done.

I sing, the breaking of that Brazen yoke,
 Which, from our gauled necks, was lately broke;
 The gracious Verdicts which the Court of heaven,
 To our Appellant-combatants, hath given;
 The thrusting of the Proud out of the Throne;
 The setting up, of humble men, thereon;
 The malice, craft, and wilfulness, of those,
 Who were our open, or our secret Foes;
 And, therewithall, the matchlesse love, of him,
 Who from their Tyrannies did us redeem,
 Shall be my Song: and I desire it may
 Be set and tuned, unto such a Key,
 As, that, my Readers, may perceive, thereby,
 The usefull power of hallow'd-Poesie,
 In raising, Gods neglected mercies, from Forgetfulness, to shine through times to come.

My Structure therefore, shall be rather strong,
 Then Lofty; that, it may continue long:
 And though my Weaknesse, may not reach to that,
 Which my Intentions have been aiming at;
 Yet, I am hopefull, that I shall be able,
 To offer an Oblation acceptable:
 For, God in willingnesse, takes much delight,
 (Although, it can but set a stone upright,
 As Jacob did) vouchsafing acceptance,
 To ev'ry Faithfull-Offers free oblation;
 And equalling the raising of one stone,
 Eve'n with the Temple, of great Solomon.

I, Voices hear, of wondrous things abroad;
 Of multitudes of Mercies, from our God;
Mercies, too great, for Scorners to believe;
 Too good, for men unthankfull, to receive:
 Such Blessings, as no former Age had greater;
 Such, as no time ensuing shall have better
 Yet, every day almost brings forth new matter
 Of exultation, both by land, and water.

Good-news, employeth almost every mouth;
 Yea, weekly from the East, the West, the South [come]
 (And thence, from whence 'twas said no good can Even from the North, Glad tidings are brought home.

To those, who for their own escapes, have mourn'd,
 With Zions Ruines, God, hath back return'd
 Those Signal-Victories, which, you have heard,
 In Publick, by a Publick Act declar'd;

With their dependent-Mercies: now, I'll add
 What from my private notions may be had;

O give attentive heed, to what is said;

And let it with due seriousness, be weigh'd:

For, I shall mention, (if time fail me not)

Things neither to be sleighted, or forgot,

But whence comes this? alas! now I am ready
 To write, I find my shaking hand unsteady.

A shivering doth surprise me; and a fear,

As if som Apparition, did appear,

Obstructing my Designs, and, to assay

The turning of my thoughts, another way.

What ails my heart! that in this uncouth fashion,
 There strives in me, a Contradicting Passion?

Which like the twins, within Rebeccas Womb, seem to be struggling, which may overcome,

Why is my heart, (which hath enough to do,

With one at once) thus overcharg'd with two?

Two Passions, as destructive to each other,

As fire and water, clos'd up together, and so divided, that, it hardly knows, to whether, most reluctancy, it owes.

This, is a day of triumph; wherein, they

Who, have achiev'd them, set us Trophies may of outward Joy, and such as could not win externalls, may keep Holyday within, theretofore, they so good husbands were,

to store up ought, for entertainment there,

It is a day, wherein, I ought to sing,
 A Song of praise; and purposed to bring Expressions forth, which might be to this Nation,
 A lengthening out of Thanks, and exultation,
 By making Gods free mercies, thought upon,
 When all this generation, shall be gone:
 Yet, now, I should perform, what I decreed;
 I, am unable, further to proceed.

Of glorious victories, the Guns, the Bells,
 And this dayes due solemnization tells,
 To make us with more seriousnessse, to heed
 Gods owning of our Armies, at their need;
 And those glad tidings, which divulged are,
 Invite to mirth; yet somewhat, bids me fear;
 Yea, though my lips are rempring of a smile,
 Mine eyes (I know not why) drop tears the while,
 Seeming to tell me with a silent voice,
 That we with trembling should this day Rejoyce:
 Yea, though I feel my heart is truly glad,
 Of what I hear; it is as truly sad,
 For what I know, for what I daily see;
 For what hath been; or may hereafter, be.

Distempred, thus, I very seldom grow;
 And, therefore, it, the more affects me, now,
 With jealousies, and Fear, lest, somewhat may
 Ere long befall us, to becloud this day.
 With me 'twas never thus, but when from Spain
 Our late unhappy King, return'd again,
 Depraved and made giddy by that Cup
 Of Poyson, whereof there he took a sup.
 And, then, I felt these Passions. I confesse
 My joy was then, as great, my fear no lesse;
 Though neither much appeared to the eye,
 Or to the ear of any stander by.

It fareth, now with me, as on that morning
 Which, first, inform'd us, of his safe returning;

For, when the voice of his arrivall came,
 The City Ben-fires, blaz'd into a flame
 Which menaced the Clouds; the Clouds powr'd down
 A flood, as if the City they would drown.
 The Common people, were transported so,
 (As 'tis their guise) that wisemen could not know Whether they might be thought, exceeding glad,
 Or, rather, to be somewhat less than mad.
 The Earth seem'd joyfull of his safe return;
 The heav'ns for something hidden seem'd to mourn,
 And, as in those, there then appear'd to be
 A disfring Passion, so, it was, with me.

Though, none more with'd the Kings returning Though I was truly glad, to see him come, (home,
 And for his safe arrivall shewed, then,
 My joy, as much, as other sober men,
 Yet, joy and sorrow strove in me together,
 As if they labour'd to supplant each other:
 And, long time kept me, in a doubtfull pause,
 Of whether His Return would give most cause;
 And by what hath succeeded, it appears,
 My joyes were far more causlesse than my fears.

The same distempers, are, this day in me,
 Great, are my joyes and hopes, great also, be
 My griefs and fears: God render them, successe,
 And consequences, of more happiness,
 Then, followed after that; and take away
 Th' effects, and causes, of my fears, this day.
 God, turn all to the best; and give us grace
 To cleave to him, what ever come to passe.
 God, give us Will, those Achans to remove,
 Which, to the publick Peace, destructive prove.
 God, grant my hopes, hereafter may be truer,
 The causes of my fear, much lesse, and fewer:
 And, that, the Councells, Charles did then neglect,
 May be received, now with more respect;

Left his example, that should make us better,
May make us worse, and our damnation greater.

For God will not be mockt; nor will he spare
For ever, though a while he doth forbear.

Where greatest Mercie, he, vouchsafes to shew,
The greatest of his Judgements will ensue.

He that improves not, ev'ry gift God gives,

(According to the measure he receives)

Shall lose the Talent upon him bestown,

And into utter darknesse too be thrown.

Then much more, they who shall Gods Grace requit

With willfull disobedience or despight:

And for that cause, it hath been said, the Lord
Is mercifull, and therefore should be fear'd.

This being true, what Realms, or Nations be Obliged more to fear him now, than we?

If, mercies, be inducements to his fear,

(As all men well informed, know they are)

What people, now, inhabits on the earth,

That, hath more cause of trembling, in their mirth;

Or, of more filial dread, when they draw nigh,

The holy name, of God to sanctifie?

For whom hath he so many wonders wrought

Since out of Egypt, Jacobs God was brought,

As for this Isle, if we reflect upon

Those things aright, which, he for us for us hath don

And, who can blame me, if I sing with fear,

This day, when we consider, what we are?

What, God is? what, they seem'd, who have been,

Destroyed for our sakes? what we, have seen

Done, for us? by what means, at, what a season?

In what great streights? how farre, beyond our reason,

Or our deserts? (Deserts said I? nay, when,

We had deserved worse than other men)

What pass'd bondage, we are freed from?

What likely slaveries, for time to come?

And what a heap of blessings we have had

how'r'd down, to make us, in his favour glad? wofl
 Who, can? (these things consider'd) who I say,
 Can blame me, if, I am afraid, this day,
 Amidst our Triumphs? and aloud should cry,
 On other men, to fear as much as I?
 For such a fear, no portion doth destroy,
 Of ought which is essentiall to our joy:
 But helps to keep it, from an overcasting,
 By future clouds, yea makes it everlasting;
 Rather preventing harm, than harm portending,
 And, from a dull security, defending.

Already, I discover, that this fear,
 Which, at the first, destructive did appear,
 To my Design, (by making up a Medley,
 Which, on a day of joy, lookt somewhat sadly)
 Proves usefull to my purpose, and makes way,
 To render that, which I intend to say,
 Much more effectually, than it would have been,
 Unless it had been thereby usher'd in.
 To make impression of a joyfull fear,
 In those, who shall of Gods protections, hear.

I feel my spirit on a sudden freed,
 From all Distempers: therefore Ile proceed,
 With what I purpos'd, and enumerate
 Some of those Mercies, which we celebrate
 This day, in hope to represent them so,
 That, out of them a filiall fear may flow,
 So tempring ev'ry Reader, that none shall,
 Neither presume, nor by despairing, fall:
 Yea, so to set them forth, I will say,
 That, in Remembrance, they continue may:
 That I, who write them, and that they who read them,
 May with more seriousness, hereafter, heed them,
 More oft meditate them, to encrease
 Our joy into a perfect thankfulness,
 And, that, as in a glasse, our eyes may see,
 How worthless, how unthankfull, yet, we be:

[8]
How these good things, which, God, in mercy, gave
To save mens lives, oft send them to their grave,
If not to Hell: how likewise to improve
Gods judgements, and, the Pledges of his love,
To our best benefits, and how to raise,
Such Monuments, and trophies, to his praise,
As, answer their intents, who set aside
This day, to be, in publick, sanctifi'd.
Without those ends, the formall observation,
Of one set-day is but a profanation;
Or, meer hypocrisie: It, makes men think
They offer incense, when they offer stink:
It makes them dream that they have something given
To God; when, they have but affronted heaven:
It proves like that Peace-offering of the Whore,
Which made her sin more boldly than before;
And to return again, to her offence,
With lesse reluctance, and more impudence:
To fast a meal or twain, and to put on
A sadnesse, for a day, is cheaper done,
Than, to deny our selves; or, to supresse,
Our Avarice, or our ambitionnesse.
To say, the Lord be thanked; or to sing,
A song of praises; is, an easier thing,
Than to expresse a hearty thankfulness,
By works of mercie, and of righteousnes:
As, giving to the poore, or, taking care
Of those that under great oppressions are:
And, 'tis alas! with us, too frequent, seen,
That some who formally dispos'd have been
To outward duties, acting joy, and sorrow,
This day (with seeming zeal) come forth, to morrow,
And prosecute their avarice, their pride,
(With whatsoe'r, they seem'd to lay aside
The former day) and, entertain as bad,
If not worse spirits, than, before they had:

Pursuing

Pursuing wilfully, Destructive ways?

What e're the Preacher, or, the Charmer says.

He, that could finde expedients to prevent
These Prophanations, Well his time had spent;
And, thanks might merit, for so having done;
(Although, he peradventure shall have none,)
I, therefore, to that purpose, will assay
To set my Meditations, for this day,
To such a Tune, as may have likelihood,
Of those effects, if rightly understood;
For (though it move, but two or three, to dance True measures) my Designe it shall advance:
And, he, that doth accept a willing heart,
More, then the best performances of Art,
Will, perfect his own work, in me, begun,
Though, that, which I perform, be weakly done.

It is not my intention to begin
Where, Gods overflowing mercie, first broke in,
Upon this Nation; For, that, would appear,
A work not for a day, or for a year,
But, for an Age: and, my poor Snuffe of Light,
Would leave me, in an everlasting night,
E're I could half those Mercies overlook,
Whereof, in few years, I have notice took:
Nay, in each Circumstance, should I display
Those, onely which, of this Thanksgiving-day,
Occasions were: I, might dilate thereon,
Till three such lives, as I have liv'd were gone.

I, therefore, will but offer up a Beam,
Out of the Sun; a drop, out of a Stream;
One Grain, out of that golden-mine, by which,
Our God, hath made us, in his Favours, rich:
Or, make a brief Collection, at the most,
Of so much, that, this day, may not be lost;
But, give thereby, a Longer lasting motion
To real Thankfulness, and true devotion.

Should I suppose a Tripled Golden chain,
 One-fold whereof sufficed to contain,
 These British Isles, with all those Seas inclos'd,
 Which, may be in a, Circle so suppos'd ;
 And, that, as many Links, thereon were found,
 As there are half-half Inches, in that Round
Of Land, and Water : therewith, should I think,
 I saw enamel'd, upon ev'ry Link,
 Ten hundred Thousand mercies ; I, might read
 All those Inscriptions thereon Character'd,
 As possibly, as make a full relation,
 Of, Gods proceedings, in our preservation.
 I, therefore, will but set forth, here, and there,
 Such Links of Providence, as do appear
 To most mens view ; that, somewhat may remain
 Still visible, of Mercies Golden Chain :
 Looking, no further back, in my design,
 Then, to the year Six hundred thirty nine
 Beyond a Thousand ; and, I will relate
 But, onely, an Epitomy, of what Hath been vouchsaf'd since then ; For, by the Pen
 You may conceive, what Lyon I could draw :
 And, if the whole proportion I should Lymn,
 I could not do, my work, within the time.

About, that year, The Tyrant (who now lies Beneath our feet) with over weening eyes,
 Had view'd himself ; and Puffed up with Pride,
 Began, to think, of being Deicide ;
 Or, at the least, of being somewhat more
 Than Man, or King ; or, then what heretofore
 He was esteem'd : and, much endeavour'd, too,
 That, we (if possible) should think him so.

His Tripple-Kingdom, upon him bestown,
 For, others ; he, usurp'd as his own ;
 Inchoching, by undue Prerogatives,
 As well, upon his Loyal Subjects lives,

As on their Free-born Persons, and Estates ;
 With what else, to their Liberties relates :
 Nay, upon that, which is more dear then these,
 (Upon the freedome of our Consciencs,)
 He made assaults ; well knowing, that would best
 Procure him (and secure him) all the rest :
 And, how to prosecute it, he, was taught,
 By them, who knew the way, to what he sought.

A Councel, he had pick'd up, who might well
 Be called his ; and, with Achitophel,
 Be judg'd Peers ; but, that, of him, in Wit,
 They came far short ; and, have not so well, yet,
 Their houses Order'd ; nor, secured so
 Their Persons, as, he had the hap to do.
 His Flattering Priests, and Poets, urg'd him on,
 To what, they found him willing to have done :
 For, by the first, there seem'd to be infus'd,
 A Conscience fitting him, to be abus'd :
 And, by the last, He, and his Queen became
 So often represented by the name
 Of Heath'nish Deities ; that, they, at last,
 Became (ev'n when their Mummeries were past)
 Like those they represented ; and, did move,
 Within their Sphears like, Venus, Mars, and Jove.
 And, had they onely failed, but, in thus Themselves befooling ; Gods, delivering us
 From being Vassals, to such Mimick-Players,
 Had merited our publike Thanks, and Prayers.
 For, when the Roman-Emperours begun
 To fill the Stage, they, Vilify'd the Throne ;
 And, those oppressions, quickly follow'd there ;
 Which, on the like beginnings, entred, here.
 He, being thus transform'd, into a thing,
 No Longer worthy to be call'd a King.
 (Tho, fairly painted, and well varnish'd over,
 The wickedness of his Designes to Cover)

A Deep foundation Laid, for such a Throne;
 As, he, Ambitious was to sit upon ;
 And, had so couch'd his Plots, (as he suppos'd)
 And, so with pow'r and Policie, inclos'd,
 His Interest (ere heed thereof was taken)
 That, few believ'd the Structure could be shaken ;
 Or, that, a possibility had been,
 Of those Events, which we have lately seen :
 Nor were they Possible untill, Gods hand,
 Did shake the Rock, whereon the Pile did stand.

For, that, secure his Actings might become,
 Himself, as well abroad, as here at home,
 He fortifi'd ; and Engineers did keep,
 To render his Designes, as large, as Deep ;
 Neglecting little, which by right or wrong,
 Might, in his undertakings, make him strong.
 With Forain Princes, and each neighbouring State,
 (To whom, himself he might ingratiate)
 He secretly comply'd ; (by whatsoere Relations, they might opposites appear.)
 At home, himself, he strengthened many ways,
 With what concerns him, who the Tyrant plays :
 As, by depressing them, who might be foes
 To his designes ; by, high Advancing those Who might promote them ; by, disabling much
 The one, and making of the other Rich :
 By projects, and Employments, which might add
 To them, and, take from others, what they had ;
 And, by all practices, which might maintain
 This Cursed Principle, Divide and Reign
 His ends he follow'd ; whatsoere it cost,
 In Treasure, or in blood. by others Lost.
 Witness, the late Inhumane Massacre,
 In Ireland: when, in few days murthere'd over :
Hundreds of Thousands ; and, as many more,
 Soon after, by Abettors thereunto,

A Massacre, beyond (without compare)
 Those, which in Sicily and Paris were,
 Though both united; yet, it is believ'd
 (Upon good grounds) to be at first, contriv'd
 By him, or with his knowledge: But of this,
 There is an Hoast, or Cloud of Witnesses,
 That, he did palliate, and look thereon
 Without Compassion, when the Deed was done;
 And, hath occasioned that Sea of blood,
 Whereby since then, these Isles have been o'erflow'd;
 Ev'n by abusing these unhappy Nations
 With vain pretences, and false Protestations.

Yet, much more great, the deluge would have been,
 Had not God's mercy interpos'd between,
 His Cruelty, and us, when, he assaid
 To tempt the Scottish Nation to give aid
 To his Designes; by promising, to add
 Four English Counties, to the bounds they had.
 When, likewise, with the Armies, in the North,
 He tamper'd, bloody mischiefs to bring forth,
 Offering them largely; when, moreover, that
 Was in designment, which, he aimed at,
 In Scotland, where, (about the self-same time)
 A Bloody Banquet, was prepar'd, by him.

Before these things (and, e're we felt those harms
 Which followed) he, found means to seize our Arms;
 And by meer power, ingross'd into his hand,
 The stores of Powder, throughout all the Land.
 He, likewise had contriv'd, how, to draw
 To serve his ends, the Masters of the Law,
 By placing, or displacing; and, thereby,
 Had, almost, fixt, a Legal Tyranny.
 By maskings, and loose Revellings, at Court;
 He, closely wrought upon the younger sort
 Of wanton Students; and allur'd thereby,
 The flower, of all the yong Nobilitie.

And Gentry of his Kingdoms to encline
To him, in whatsoere, he should design.

His Council-Table, was bespread with snares,
To catch, and hamper those, at unawares,
Who stood for Liberty; his Courts, were made
Both Instrumental to the Bribing Trade,
And Bawdes, to help advance unjust designes,
By false decrees, wrong Judgments, mults, or Fines.
For, Justice, was afforded, there, to few
Save such, as to his Interests, were true:
And, most of those (without attending long)
Had what they su'd for, whether, right or wrong.

His overgrown Prerogative, Laid hold
On our Proprieties; and, scarcely should Ere long, a Natural-action to this nation,
Allow'd have been, without a dispensation,
Or Fine, First paid: No; not, to eat, or drink,
To go, or come; to speak, or safely think,
Should we have been permitted; had not God,
To his usurpings, put a Period.

For, many, to Accompt, not for deeds done
Have called been, or, for bare-words, alone;
But otherwhile, to Question, some were brought
For those things, also, which, to have in thought
They were suspected: yea, such was the Rage,
Of Tyranny, that, Children under age,
For Childish words (spoke without ill intent)
Were, not alone, to severe Chastisement
Made Lyable; but, forc'd to suffer, too,
That painful death, which wilful Traitors do:
As (by a cruel act, of all abhor'd)

Appears at Sarum, yet, upon record:
No marvel then, if neither Sope nor Fire
Nor Raking rotten Rags, out of the Mire,
Or Freedom, in such poor and Trivial things,
As are Tobacco-Pipes, and Fiddle-strings,

Could be allowed in this Common-weal,
Without a Fine, or Patent under Seal.

His Peerage (some excepted) was indow'd,
With Priviledges, but, to make them Proud,
And fit, them to oppress or to enslave
The people, unto him, from whom they have Their empty Titles. Upon some of these
He did Confer the highest Offices,
By great sums, purchased; that, so, they mought
By selling dear (because they dearly bought)
Engaged be, to share in his oppressions;
And, strengthen by injustice, their possessions:
To make them still, have need of his protection;
And, cleave to him, through Fear, if not Affection.
To this Intention, they had also share:
In those Base Projects, which injurious were,
To publike-right; and, they employ'd their power
To begger, to disgrace, or quite devour,
All those, who did not readily befriend,
His purpose; or, else, freely give, or Lend,
Or stand engag'd, to Answer his desire,
In whatsoe're he pleased to require:
And, he, that sought a remedy, by Law,
For these Intrusions, did but onely draw,
More mischiefs on himself: For, 'twas a flower,
Slipt from the Crown; and, by the Royal power,
Deriv'd; that, they should be secur'd, by might, |
From wrongs receiving, and, from doing right.

But, God, for this Injustice, now hath broke,
That Scepter: From their heads, their Crown shath took
And, shall destroy all those who will not see,
That want of Justice, and of Mercy, be
The Signal causes, of those desolations,
That fall on private-Persons, Kings, or Nations.
And, they, who for Gods Justice, upon these,
(Together with, the great deliverances Thereby, vouchsafed) cannot, yet perceive

 Just causes, of the Publike thanks we give ;
 Of their concernments, take so little heed,
 That, to awaken them , I will proceed.

The Tyrant, had some other Instruments,
 (To further him, in his unjust intents)
 In order to our Bondage : among whom,
 None did more milchievous to us become,
 (Nor, any, for him, play their Prizes better)
 Then, his proud Priests: nor, was he more a debtor
 To any, then to them : and, I dare say,
 So dearly for it, he, to none did pay.
 His Prelates, and their Underlings, he bought
 To serve his ends, (by giving what they sought
 And what he had in Guilt) or, else perchance,
 He might in Vain, have piped them a dance.
 Instead of Preaching Christ, they Preach'd us down
 To Slavery ; and Idoliz'd the Crown :
 Then, to requite what they had done, for him ;
 He, fool'd away three Royal-Crowns, for them :
 They (seeming confident he should prevail)
 Upon his Kingly Person did intail, Divinity ; that, arrogate he might
 His Usurpations, by a Sacred right :
 He, to retaliate what they bestow'd
 With Temporal possessions, them endow'd :
 And these by their false Doctrines did besot
 The Vulger so ; that, in them it begot, Idolatry ; and therein they hold on,
 Their Dotage, though their Deity is gone :
 Yea, though their Idol, quite destroy'd they see,
 And, Dagon-like, without a head to be.

To make his Clerick Engines serviceable, (Yet further) he, did strongly them enable
 With Pow'r Canonical ; which, would have brought More mischief on us, then most had in thought ;

And,

And, such, as might at length, have entrance made
 For all, that superstition, would have had ;
 (Although 'twas Cloked with a formal zeal,
 Of Piety, their purpose to conceal ;)
 And, when these preparations, had unhallow'd
 Our Churches ; Popery, would soon have follow'd:
 The People, should have been, once more, an Ass,
 For Prelates to have ridden as it was ;
Kings, should have been but Blocks to help them on,
 And, Emperours, their Stirrups wait upon.

But, mark Gods, Justice, and retaliation,
 To these ; for, it is worth your observation:
 The Prelates, justly, lost their temporalities,
 For smooth'ring Truth, and Preaching vanities.
 For seizing that, which Legally is known,
 The Peoples right, the King hath lost his own :
 And King and Prelates, joyning both together,
 In Tyranny, have ruined each other.

Thus far, you see Gods mercies ; and, thereby
 May see, his Justice, too, with half an eye,
 And what must have succeeded ere this day,
 If these, had lived in their wicked way ;
 And, we are graceless, if we praise not him,
 By whom, We had deliverance from them :
 For, by those Hydra's heads, not yet bereft,
 (And by that Poyson, which is in them left)
 It is apparant, We should scarce have had,
 A day of rest until our Graves were made.
 On us, by his Assistants, he had brought Such Slavery, that, we had scarcely ought
 To call our own ; Or, at the least, left Free
 From those Intrusions, which were like to be :
 Yet, worse it would have been ; as, might appear
 Beyond dispute, should I make mention, here,
 What, I have known, and seen, in preparation,
 To bring a further Bondage ; on this Nation.

Most,

Most, are forgetful of what's past; and, some:
 By never heeding it, are now become Unthankful Murmurers, repining at Their present Contributions, to the State:
 Because, the Payments, yet impos'd, are more,
 By much (as they conceive) then heretofore:
 (Considering, neither what necessities
Now are; nor, from whose Faults, they do arise.

There is, indeed, a very Large expence,
 Occasioned to make our Just-defence,
 Against the many practices of those
 Who, settlement of Peace do still oppose:
 And by long lasting Wars, at Sea, and Land,
 (In several Kingdoms) thereby, to withstand,
 Our present enemies (and to prevent Their future purposes) vast sums, are spent:
 But, this, was by Constraint; and, we have hope
 These Issues of expence, will quickly stop;
 If we with Patience, for a while, could bear
 With those Disbursements which Compelled are:
 And, would consider, at how much more cost,
 We were, that, all our *Freedom*s might be Lost.
 As, also, what great Burthens, it would bring,
 To readmit a Tyrannizing King,
 With all those swarms of Locusts, and of Flies,
 Which are begot, and fed by Tyrannies:
 With what must be exacted to maintain
 The boundless Cravings, of his hungry Train.

We like the Sons of Jacob, were oppress'd;
 And, God, is making us, a Path to Rest,
 As, he did them, so, he, doth lead us through Much Hardship, and great difficulties, now:
 And some of us, like them, (nay, worse then they)
 Ev'n almost at the Period of our way,
 Would back return; and, brutishly Complain
 As if our Ease, were sharper then our pain.

Now therefore, I will here insert a Note
Expressing part, of what we have forgot ;
That, when our former Burthens we review,
We may, more thankfully, our Peace pursue.

We were oppress'd by his vain expence,
Of Large Revenues, which, for our defence,
And for the Nations honour, were with him,
Intrusted ; For, by his consuming them
Upon vain Lusts ; constrain'd we were. to add Supplies, oft-times ; for which, Returns we had
Of many new occasions, to increase
Our Burthens, rather then to make them Less :
And still whatever was on him bestown
He took without Thanksgiving, as his own.

Great Subsidies, with such like payments gain'd
By false pretences (as by dangers gain'd.
Or some like that,) by him, were, also, spent
In prosecutions, to the detriment,
Of all the Nation ; and so, all that Cost
Was, thereby (as to us) much worse then Lost.

By many, other wayes, he did enlarge
Our Burthens, and this Nation over-charge.
By Universal Loans ; with an Intent,
Never, to render back, the money Lent.
By Privy Seals ; which, he did seldom pay
Except, for other borrowings, to make way.
By Contributions, termed Free ; altho,
We paid them, whether, we did List, or no.
By household-Compositions, (for the Table,
The Kitchen, Sellar, and the Royal Stable) Which, of themselves, (if we consider shall What, Officers exacted, therewithall)
Might have maintain'd a King, much better than All Scotlands Royal patrimony can.
Yet, this too, (as I finde, by Inquisition)
Was taken, by a forced Composition.

To these, may added be, what he encroach'd
 By Projects, and by Offices new Broach'd
 By selling-places, by drown'd Lands, and Fenns;
 By Fines, for Cottages of other mens;
 By wrong pretended right, to Lands conceal'd;
 By Ulnage, and by cloaths, and Drapries seald;
 By Patents, Corporations, Fees, and Toll;
 By sev'ral Writs, and money by the Poll:
 By Coate and, Conduct-money; and, by that
 For Ships, which, was extreamly Grumbled at.
 By Tunnage, Poundage, Customes, both in use,
 And pretermitted; to the great abuse
 Of Trade and Merchants; who, tho paying of these
 To be secur'd from Pirates on the Seas,
 VVere left unguarded; to the frequent spoil,
 Of Private men, and weakning of this Isle.

Moreover, out of our Estates, he made
 Large profit, by the forfeitures, he had;
 By Bonds Recognizances, and, by Suits;
 By Tenths, by Lycences, and by First-fruits,
Escheats, Amercements, Mullets of several sorts,
 In sev'ral Causes; and in sev'ral Courts.
 By Wards, and Marriages; by suing forth
 Of Liveries (which now are nothing worth)
 By Honorary Titles, Sould to such
 As were not thereby honoured so much,
 As honor was disgrac't; by great sums paid
 For Corronation-Knights; by Coynage, Aid;
 And, by a multitude of wayes beside,
 (Too many, hereby, to be specifi'd)
 This Nation was oppress'd. All which, though now
 Of their late Griefs, forgetful, many grow,
 (More notice taking, of what Lies upon Their backs, at present, then, of what is gone)
 VVould, if sum'd up, a greater Burthen prove Then VVe have born, our Bondage to remove.

Considering his vast Incomes, needlessly
 VVere wasted, on his Lusts; or, that thereby
 He might Inslave us: whereas, all we spent VVas by Constraint, or, that, VVe might prevent Bell, and the Dragons, ravenous designs:
 And, therefore, whosoe're, thereat repines,
 Doth neither his own welfare, understand,
 Nor, that great work, which God, hath now in hand.

But, if our Citizens, who have forgot
 Their former Pressures (and, begin to dote Upon an Idol-Majestic) would take,
 More heed; they doubtless, more esteem would make
 Of Gods late Mercies; and, an offering Bring
 To expiate their cursed Murmuring.
 If, they would mind, at what uncertainties,
 They did possess their goods, and Liberties;
 What Interruptions, formerly they had;
 What Innovations, as concerning Trade:
 How oft, their Charters, upon slight pretence,
 Were questioned, to put them to expence:
 What Presents, they have been Constrain'd to give,
 For Favours, which, they never could receive;
 What Bribes, to get their grievances remov'd;
 And how unfruitful, Nay-the-less they prov'd;
 What Scorns, and What disgraces, in time past,
 On them, have undeservedly been cast;
 How oft, when Legally, they sought their own,
 They were abus'd, and into Prisons thrown,
 Till they were glad, to quit a long-due-debt,
 Lest, else, a greater mischief they might get.
 Would they remember, their late sad Condition,
 Occasion'd, by the Cruel Inquisition
 Set up at Lambeth; by the merciless
Star-chamber Court; and by th'Imperiousness
 Of his Court-Marshal; where their Innocence,
 Was rack't and tortur'd, by the Insolence,

Of Officers ; of Clerks ; Apparators ;
 Of Pursuivants ; and Cut-throat Messengers.
 Were it remembred more, how they, complain'd,
 Of grievances by their late King sustain'd,
 And his ill Councillors: (whom we now see Not half so worthy, of our blame as he)
 They would not in their Courage, be so poor ;
 Nor, so unlike, to what they were before.

Yea, would they but recal, how furiously
 They Acted (ev'n almost to mutiny)
 Against the King ; and to th'incouragement
 Of this (then, Highly honour'd) Parliament ;
 How zealously, Horse, money, Arms, and Plate,
 They, then, Contributed, to Vindicate,
 Their nigh-Lost Liberties ; how oft. they fought,
 To bring to Pass what, now to Pass is brought ;
 And, therewithall, would seriously take heed,
 That whatsoever did thereupon succeed,
 Beyond their first aym, was, Gods work (not our)
 + They would confess his Justice, with his Power,
 And Mercy : For, all these were manifest,
 When, of his Throne, the King, he dispossest ;
 And took away both Crown, and Life from him,
 That, our, and his long-sufferings, did concern.

These things, could they consider somewhat more,
 They would more thankful be, then heretofore ;
 And, not so irreligiously persever
 To murmur, that, God blest their own endeavour ;
 Nor, be so mad, to Aye those, underhand,
 Who, Gods, declared purposes, withstand ;
 Lest, their Ingratitude, he should repay
 With greater Plagues, then, he hath took away :
 And, give them, in his anger, such a thing,
 As they deserve, another, Tyrant King.

— If, Likewise, they, who in the Country, sing Thanksgivings backward, (and with murmuring

Require

Requite Gods mercies) would, by looking back,
 On what is past, more heedful notice take VVhat, yearly, out of their Estates was taken,
 In Lamb, Veal, Butter, Poultry, Eggs, and Bacon ;
 In Wheat, Oats, Hay, and such like things as these,
 (From which exactions, they are now at ease)
 How oft their Teemes, and Carts, were forced from Their husbandries, and Harvest-works at home :
 To their great detriment, for hyre, but small,
 And, many times, for no reward, at all :
 How oft, their Saddle-Horses, as his own,
 Were, by his Courtiers, Posted up and down
 As for the Publike, upon Publike Warrants,
 When, they were, onely, sent on Private arrants :
 How, by the multiplying of his Game,
 Oppressed, and enslaved, they became,
 To their great Detriment ; yea, many times,
 To their undoing, for suspected Crimes :
 And, how, their Nimrods (or chief Foresters)
 VVith their insulting Under-Officers,
 Compelled many, for their preservations,
 Quite to forsake, their Ancient Habitations,
 Or leave their Fields, or Woods, unto the spoyl
 Of Useless Beasts, and Beastly-men, the while.
 VVould they, these things Consider ; and, that those Taxations, which the State doth now impose ;
 VVith all their late oppressive Plunderings,
Large Contributions, and Free Quarterings,
 VVere first occasion'd, by his Tyrannies ;
 (Or, their own False-hood, or Neutralities)
 They would not, like the murmuring Israelites, Render abuse, Reproaches, and despights,
 To their Deliverers ; because, a few,
 Among them, to their trust, have prov'd untrue ;
 And, to their own los, by their selfishness,
 Defer that Peace, which, else, they might Possess.

Nor would they, so unthankfully, desite
 To their Egyptian Thraldom, to retire,
 And to their Garlick; when there feet, were brought
 So neer, unto that Rest, which, long they sought:
 Muchless, when they had (as it were) been fed
 With Manna, and, Mirac'lously been led Through many Streights (for wonderment, no less Then, Israel Passed, in the Wildernefs)
 VVould they, by Stagg'ring, in a Good-proceed,
 Both re-inslave themselves, and all their seed.

Now, if (as other Voluntary preachers Presume to do) I, may to teach my Teachers
 Take boldness: I would seriously advise
 Some, of our Clergie, to become more wise:
 Ev'n those, who, by a peevish frowardness,
 Neglect, not onely, that due Thankfulness,
 VVhich is commanded; but, make others too
 Prevaricate, from what they ought to do;
 By slighting what Authority enjoyns,
 And prosecuting of their own Designes.

Oh, God! VVhat bold, what strange Apostacie
 Is this? And from a Christian Ministry,
 How disagrees it, that they should profess
 Or, teach, or sooth up an Unthankfulness?
 And, whence, proceeds it, but from their old vice,
 Of Selfishness, or Pride, or Averice?
 VVhich, (as it hath, well near, already, done)
 VVill loose them all, that, they insist upon;
 If, they proceed to prosecute those ends
 VVhich they and their Fraternitie intends.

God, bears me witness, I, envy them not
 The least Advantages which to their Lot,
 By right, pertain; But, rather, would improve,
 My Vote, (with real heartincis, and Love)
 To give them double-honour, and advance
 VVhat is thier due, by sacred Ordinance:

For they who serve him without By-Respects;
Had never cause to say, that God neglects
Their service; though he sometime lends them forth,
Neither with money, or with money worth:
As, every one observes, who taketh heed,
How plentifully at all times of need,
He them supplies, that, his allowance take
With Thankfulness, and work, for Conscience sake, Without Capitulating, whether they
In Pensions, or, in Tithes, shall have their pay.

What is it Angers them? Are they displeas'd,
(Though, of their former Grievances, now eas'd)
That, they, themselves impow'rd do not finde
To Act the Prelates, in another kinde?
And, to succeed them in their vast Possessions,
Which was the chiefe end of their Oppositions?
Are they, again desirous of a King?
How so? Since, they are those, who, first did bring Those things to controversie, whereupon,
That Justice, which they murmur at, was done?
What, can they hope, by bringing back again
That Power, whereof, they lately did complain?
But, greater mischiefs, and a heavier yoke,
Then that, which from their Necks, was lately broke?
Considering, what Confed'rates, they now have
This Nation, and Themselves, to re-inslave?
Are they afraid those Tithe-pigs may be lost,
Which have so many Tracts and Sermons cost
To prove them sacred? That's, a needless fear,
As, yet; For, by our Laws confirm'd they are:
And, till supream power, shall by Law revoke them,
They, may receive them, as they lately took them:
And without question, all such due supplies
Will still vouchsafed be, as may suffice.
Nor have they cause to murmur, though it may
Provided, for them be, some other way

Since, by their Scotish Discipline, they find Their claimed Tithes; are seldom paid in kind.

Is it, their zeal against New-Hereties,
The Ranters Tenents, or the Blasphemies,
VVhereof the Scot injuriously avers
Our State, and Army to be favorers,
VVhich makes them discontent? I think not so,
VVhat er'e they may pretend: for, they well know,
The Parliament hath lately made a Law,
To keep Blasphemous Libertines in aw;
And to correct their Manners, who transgress
Against the Rules of Moral Righteousness;
And, from our Armies frequently they hear,
That such, by them severely punish'd are.

Let them take heed, lest their Endeavour flows
From Causes, which may prove much worse then those
There mentioned; ev'n from an Interest,

Pursu'd, to raise the throne of Antichrist
A new found way: or else, from some vain hope,
In every parish to erect a Pope.

Let them take heed, lest er'e they be aware,
Their Carnal policie may them ensnare:
For, by that power, whereat their Parties aim,
They seem to be affected with his Claim

VVho, to Gods throne aspires: or else, to that VVhich will produce a double-headed State.

Or, that, at least, from thence, this may redound;
That, (if the Royallists can cure their wound
By what, is now design'd; They, and their Friends
The Romanists may thereby gain some ends
Obstructive to our Peace; though totally Destructive to their New Presbytery;

VVhich they seditiously have preach'd and praid,
To build up by their Ground-works, lately laid.

Oh! therefore, let them speedily return
To their lost Path; for their backslidings, mourn;
Gods

Observe Gods Providence, approve his waies,
And joyn with us, in singing of his Praise.
Let them stir up their Flocks to Thankfulness,
Like others of their Calling, who profess
The self-same Faith; and help us, to redeem
The losses of Advantages, and Time,
Occasion'd by their Schism; that, we and they May friendlike walk together in one way,
Partakers, of that happy peaceful being,
Which is deferred, by our disagreeing.

For, were all well consider'd, all men would,
Without the least obscurity, behold,
What cause we have, to sing Gods Praise, this day,
For taking of our Slaveries away:
And, in the first place, for removing Him,
Who, wore, unworthily, the Diadem,
Of Supreme Government. But, least, some, yet,
May our fore-past-condition so forget,
As to believe, we might have been secur'd,
From that, which under Kingship we endur'd,
By regulating it (which, I once thought,
Till, I by Providence, was better taught)
Let them, with me, take notice, and, well weigh
How many hundred years, we did assay
This Remedy in vain; and, heretofore
Spend all our pains, to wash a Blackamore.

Let them look back, and heed, how oft we Fought,
And by fair-means, and humble Prayer, sought
A firm establishment, of what, we knew,
(And had oft prov'd) to be our proper-due:
How many Charters, and, how many Laws,
Were made, by Kings, in favour of our Cause:
How many Curses, and sad Imprecations,
Were laid upon their wilful Violations:
How many times, their Royal words, we had;
How many Oaths, and Vows, were sworn, and made;

Yet, faithlesly, still, broken, afterward,
Without remorse of Conscience, or, regard
Of God, or Men; and, still, revok'd, as soon
As Opportunities were fastned on,
To prosecute, again, their Tyranny.

And, let us likewise, heed impartially,
How much, our late King, labour'd to make void
His free Donations; and, to have destroy'd
His own Concessions: what dire Imprecations
He likewise, ventred on; what Protestations,
He dared, with a purpose to deceive;
And, with a hope of making us believe,
He, meant us well; when, he did, all the while,
Intend his Own-advantage, and, our Spoil:
Improving, still, (what, er'e, he did pretend)
All our Indulgences, to his first end,
Ev'n to his Death: witness, his, laying Plots
To make a Rent, betwixt us, and the Scots;
Yea, and, among our selves, that very time,
In which, we Treating were, of Peace, with him.
Hoping, at last, by one device or other,
To make us, do his work, and, fall together.
And, of those Juglings, now, the fruits appear,
In Ireland, Scotland, Holland, France, and here.

What could, we have, expected, from a King,
So wilful, and so false, in every thing?
Or, from the Off-spring, of a Generation,
So long time, rooted in Prevarication?
So long, irreconcilably profest
An enemy, to Publick Interest?
And, claiming, so Imperiously, to be,
From all the Bands of Law, and Reason, free?
What hopes could we have had, that, we should ever
Have tam'd this Lion, by our best endeavour?
Or, any of his Whelps? or, means have found,
Whereby, they might, have been, securely bound,

From

From Crushing all our bones; if, they again,
Should slip their Collers, or else break their Chain?

For my part, I so well found, what he was;
That, though I had large offers of his Grace,
And studied his chief good; yet, still I found,
His Heart so hard, so double, and unsound,
(Ev'n to his last breath) that, I must confess
It was Gods mercie, and, our Happiness
That, he so fell; and, 'twill be to the Glory
Of this our Nation, in their future Story,
That, whereas others have Clandestinely,
By Poyson, or by Murther, secretly,
Remov'd their Tyrants; we, with open face;
By Publick Justice; in a Publick place;
In presence, of his friends, and, in despite
Of all our foes, and ev'ry opposite,
Try'd, Judg'd, and Executed, without fear;
The greatest Tyrant, ever reigning here.

Take then, Gamaliels counsel, and submit,
To that, which Providence, adjudgeth fit
Should come to pass; lest else, perhaps, you may Be found resistors of your God, this day.
Halt not 'twixt two opinions, as ye do;
But, heed his walkings, and, conform thereto.
If, to this Government, you do adhere,
Let, it, by your Obedience, now appear:
If, you Dissent; make publick your Protest,
As we have done; unite your Interest,
To Him, whom you desirous are should Reign:
And, if you dare, come, and appeal again
To God, That, he may quickly send you thither;
Where, you may perish, or repent together:
For, we are confident, the work begun
Our God, will prosper, still, as he hath done;
And, that when such as you, are in your place,
We, shall behold the fulness of his Grace.

But er'e you grow so mad to run that way,
 Be pleas'd to hear, what I have more to say.
 What profit will you get at last by that,
 Which you have indiscreetly aimed at,
 Tho it should thrive ; and, you, should hither bring VVith all his Rabblement, the Scotish King ?
 Should they with all their strength unite together ,
 And like an Inundation, flow in hither ;
 Set your Fair Towns, and Villages on fire,
 (As you, in probability, desire)
 VVhich would be done, (though you desir'd it not)
 If, there to your assistance they had got :
 If, with a Lousie Army they should cover
 Your fruitful fields ; spread your fair Meadows over VVith their Devouring-Troops ; your houses fill VVith Nasty sluts , and Grooms against your will ;
 Making your Parlours, and your Halls to stink
 VVith slutttery, like a dunghill, or a sink :
 If, you should see your hardly-gotten-stores,
 Devour'd by loose Commanders, and their whores ;
 Their Brutish followers rudely take the bread,
 VVith which, your Little-children should be fed,
 Out of their hands ; and, keep you so in aw,
 That you should scarcely dare to lodge in straw,
 (Although your own) whilst those bold guests did lie
 In your soft beds ; and some stand emptie by :
 Should you behold them, proudly domineer,
 VVhere you this day, both Lords, and Masters are :
 Should you, who may, in peace enjoy your lives,
 See your estates, your Children, and your Wives,
 Incroach'd upon ; the first of them possess'd
 By those, who faigned friendship had profess'd ;
 The other, ev'n before your face, mis-us'd ;
 The last, perhaps, immodestly abus'd :
 And you your self, if that appear dislike'd)
 Disgracefully, both flouted at, and kickt.

Should you be ol l such things, which (if they come Upon those terrs that are desir'd by some)
VVould surely follow ; what should you then gain
By that, whereof you seem to be so fain ?

Think you, the most Malignant Cavaliers,
The worst of Papists, and of Presbyters
(United in a Trinity together)

Will bring you puritie of worship hither ?

Or can the wisest man alive conceive,

What Linsy-woolsey-stuff the Kirk must weave,

To make a Garment, which will fit and please,

A body, made up of such Crooks as these ?

Or frame a discipline that will agree,

With such dissenting parties as those three ?

Can you be so imprudent to suppose,

That your New feigned friends, and Ancient foes,

(Disgraced and enrag'd as now they are)

With any good intentions will draw near ?

Or give you precious things, to make you brave ?

Or better Fields and Gardens, then you have ?

Or that your entertainment, whilst they stay ,

Will cost you less then what we monthly pay

Unto our Army , which by that expence

Is yet maintained, for our just defence ?

Or can you dream, (if at their choice it stand)

That, having found the sweetness of this Land,

The Scots, will be so mad, as thence to go

To feed on Thistles, and to lie in Snow ?

Or think you, they, had lately, gone away

So quietly, but to obtain their pay,

To render them more able to come back,

When more it might for their advantage make ?

Do you believe, that, they intend to bring

Their lately Crown'd, and new-converted King,

To vindicate the justness of our Cause ?

Our ancient Freedoms, and our English Laws ?

Or, that, they (having little of their own,
 To keep him) so much cost would have bestown;
 But, that, they are made hopeful to advance
 As well their own wealth, as his maintenance
 From your Estates? Can your Dull brains, admit,
 That, he, or his, for ever, will forget,
 His Fathers head? his own deserv'd disgrace?
 And, on what Terms, you forc'd him to embrace
 A loathed Covenant, which, he did take,
 More for a Kingdom, then for Conscience sake?
 Or can you be so blinde, as not to see
 That, all things, which in your possession be,
 VVill scarce suffice to make full recompence,
 For Damages, and losses, ever since?
 These wars began; when, he makes Computation
 Thereof, and shall demand a Reparation?
 Especially, when all his needy-Train,
 And Greedy-party, shall to him complain
 For satisfaction, of their Vast Arrears?
Losses, and Expectations, like to theirs?

Believe it, E're that debt, will quite be paid,
 They, who are yet, of no such thing afraid,
 VVill finde, that most (or all of them) shall be Contributers thereto, as well as we,
 VVho are proscrib'd: And, that, if they are rich,
 It will not then, consider'd be, so much,
How they affected stood, as what they have,
 To satisfie the lusts, of those that crave:
 And, all they, who are Neuters, now, or Friends
 In secret, unto that, which he intends,
 Shall, finde small means, to help distinguish them
 From those, whom he, for Traytors, will condemn.
 And, their false friends, will then Retaliate
 Their former hate, and falsehood to this State.

Oh! lest, this come to pass, more thankful be
 To him, who hath begun, to set you free,

From

from former Bondage ; and, from what you may,
 Occasion, by an Ill-advised way.

Observe well, whether that, which God hath wrought, for this poor Nation, could to pass be brought,
 by strength, or Wit of men ; had he not been,
 our helper ; and, assistances brought in.
 how, had so many, been so oft, by few, defeated else ? how, had the Foes they slew and took, so often, more then doubled those,
 Whom, they in open Battle, did oppose ?

 by bringing of one Single-vote, between our spoil, and us ? how, having had, a Foe
 so strong, so Craftie (and, a Party too of his, within our bosomes) had we thus, prevailed, and escap'd, what threatned us ?
 yea, and, among so, many murmurings ;
 among so many disencouragings,

as we have had ? and, (which is worse then so) amidst, A People, not so wise, to know,
 Who, seeks their Weal ? how, had we stood so long ?
 but, that, God gave us hearts, and made us strong !

Had I, a memory, and time to spare,
 but half those Evidences to declare,
 Which, of Gods Providence, my observation hath taken heed of, by the dispensation, of mercies, to this Land, since, he begun,

 o laid the first foundation of this War ; d, how far on, their Projects carried were,

In England, and in Ireland, ere our eyes,
 Observ'd the chief ends of their Policies:
 How, first, the Lawyers, and Ambitious Priests,
 Were woo'd and won to serve his Interests;
 And, active to become, In making void
 The Just proprieties, that we enjoy'd,
 In Civil things; and, render our condition
 More slavish, by inducing Superstition.
 How, next he wrought upon, those Hypocrites,
 Who, seeming Patrons, of the peoples rights,
 Became, at last to be the worst of those,
 Who, to the Publike-Liberties, are foes.

Could, I expression make, How, God improv'd,
 His mercies to this Isle. when he remov'd
Strafford, and Canterbury; how, their Plot,
 To ruine us. by ayning at the Scot,
 (As their first mark) was made, the means of that Which, we were hopeless of arriving at,
 (By such a far-fetcht Compass) and, brought on
 What we did never purpose to have done.
 Should I, at full, illustrate here, how, they Came, first, to do their own work; then, took pay
 To Further ours; and, by meer standing still,
 Enabled us, to do (against their Will)
 What they pretended, with no true intents;
 As hath been manifested by th'e events.

Such, as their fraudulent Juggling, in receiving
 The King neer Newark; thereby, us bereaving:
 Of those Advantages, for which we Fought:
 And, for which, we their help had dearly bought.
 Such, as their wrestling, that, which they profess
 For our Joynt Good, to private-Interest;
 Making the Covenant, seem a just occasion,
 Of Prosecuting an unjust Invasion.
 Such, as their Practices. when, here they Lay Like Snakes within our bosoms, to betray and ruine us ; by working upon those,

 Who were too Credulous, of their fair-shows, of Piety, and Love ; For, whilst they were with kindness, entertain'd amongst us, here, they were but Spies and Agents, to promote their own designs : And, doubtless, had it not by God prevented been. we had been more ere this. by them enslav'd. then heretofore.
 yea, by those Actings, which we saw by them
 pursu'd when they, were wakned from the dream Which they pretended, (and which we did take for truth, till we, from dreamings did awake)
 All men may evidently now perceive
 What, we, of their Intentions may believe.

If, I, could make you apprehend the grace,
 Which God vouchsafed. when he pleased was to move the King a Parliament to call,
 That should be made destructive unto all his own Designes ; permitting, that he should saugre, his Fine-Devices, be so foot'd, as to restore, (of that Just-power it had) so much, as that, It could not be un-made,
 Without it own Assent ; you would believe,
 That, Mercie, was a visible reprieve from our undoing. For, that made the way, to other Priviledges which long lay,
 Unheeded, or unpractis'd ; because,
Prerogative, had swallowed up the Laws,
 Or, leis'd upon the Power, by which, we might regain possession, of our Ancient-Right.
 But, having, thereby, got that Power again,
 Which, we are hopeful, they shall still retain)
 They (for abusing Kingship, heretofore) enacted, that, we should have, Kings. no more.
 Should I, sum up, what dangers did appear,
 And, what, Gods open, and close mercies were,

VVhen

When Glocester was besieg'd ; when, many thought
 They, other habitations must have fought ;
 And, sent the Goods, and Treasure, they could spare
 To Amsterdam, to be secured there.

VWhen, Bristol was resign'd ; and, all the Land
 (Save one poor Corner) in the Tyrants hand.

When, in the West, one General, began
 To grow afraid, and from his Army ran,
 When, by another, something was was misdome,
 Of no mean consequence, at Dennington.

When, other Chiefs, (by rambling up and down)
 With their Brigades, their Credits had, or'e thrown ;
 And, did begin to Act destructively.

To them, whose good success, they did envy.
 When, they, who for our Succour, feign'd to come,
 Conspir'd against us, here, and, then went home
 To prosecute their mischiefs. When, the Foe,
 Became so strong, and, We, so weak did grow,
 That, for our Re-enforcement, we were fain
 To take all comers ; and, some to constrain ;
 In whom, we could but forily confide.

VWhen, in our Houses false friends did reside,
 More to our cost, and to the hazarding
 Of all ; then all, the Armies, of the King.

VWhen, Our first Champions (who did over-ween
 Their own deserts) swoln bigg with Pride, and Spleen
 Jeer'd our New-Model'd-Army, as if none
 Could do such wond'rous feats, as they had done,
 VWhen, from the Parliament, by shameless lies,
 (VWeekly perpetuated by supplies)

The peoples hearts, were woo'd away, to those,
 That were, and are, and will be, still their Foes.

VWhen Fury had possessed many so,
 That, like a sudden Torrent, they did flow
 Impetuously, up to the Senate-dore ;

Yea, break in thither, and, there foam, and rove

Should I proceed on further, and, with these make mention of Gods great deliverances,
When, he at Hull, the first and second time, did Nullifie a Royal Stratagem.
When likewise, there appear'd a dang'rous Rent, in City, Army, and in Parliament;
not onely, thole dividing from each other,
but from themselves, to ruine altogether.
When, both the Armies unto God appeal'd,
as to their Soveraign Judge, at Naasby-field:
When, all things, that were dear unto us, lay,
upon the doubtful Tryal of one day.
When God, at Brainford, by a poor mans wit, and Vallour, (which none hath consider'd yet) saw our Chief-city. For, had not, He, been, the King, had then surpriz'd it, by design,
With all our Train (left for him in the way at Hammer-smith) whilst, our Commanders lay secure at London; who, did, little fear, so great a danger, had been, then so near.
For, should I tell, with every Circumstance,
God's mercie shewn in our Deliverance,
When (after quenching of the Gen'ral flame) rested, with new, Mischiefs, we became.
When Wales revolted; when, with Surrey, Kent, and, Essex follow'd that bad president.
When, Scotland (their confederate) came in to second, what their fallshood did begin;
and, after all their great hopes, and vain Braggs,
Were glad, to begg the saving of their Craggs.
When, our perfidious Seamen, did betray their trust; and with our Sea-guard stole away.
When, our unfriendly Neighbours, looked on,
the Treason, as well pleas'd with what was done;
and, did, encrease our hazard, by supplying our Foes wants; and, by under-hand-complying.
When,

VVhen, all our Ports, upon the Irish Coast, (VVith every Inland Town) save two, were lost.
VVhen our sick Army, likewise, near Dunbar Inclosed by their Adversaries were,
VVithout the least, Reserve, in their distress;
Weak Weary, Wounded, Hungry. Harbourless,
Wet, Cold, and Straighned so, that, in their Power (Both by the Foes opinion, and by Our,)
They seem'd to bee; till, God look't through the Clouds
And, then, the Lowly, trampled on the Proud.
And, lastly; when, Surrender up was made
Of Edenborough Castle; which, we had,
At such a season as much more then doubles
The Benefit; considering, what troubles, (VVhat dangers) might have follow'd; had we
So opportunely, that Strong-Fortress got:
And, this great mercie, was the Just occasion,
Of this days meeting, and Solemnization.

VVhen these Deliv'rances, and of this kinde,
Some others, I do fully call to minde;
VVith all the Circumstances, too, whereby
VVe might illustrate every Victory,
To Gods due praise; and, to th'annihilating
Of our Endeavours; therewith Meditating, VVhat, we have gain'd; and what it might have Had any of our hopes, in these, been lost;
(Or, his Assistances with-holden been During those straights, which, we were sometimes
I cannot, but unfainedly confels,
His Goodness, with a hearty thankfulness;
And, for the Honour of his Name, assay,
To keep, an Everlasting Holyday.

To these Considerations, I might add,
How many are displeas'd, and almost mad,
VVith Rage, to see that, still, in their dispite,
God, looks upon our Thrivings, with delight,

d. still, makes void their Malice ; still, unknots, from time to time) and Nullifies their Plots.
Constantly, He, Leads our Armies on
With Victories ; as if, the Work were done fore they came ; and, left them nothing else do ; but, take the pris'ners, and the Spoils. strangely. He, in Ireland, did begin make us Room ; when, we had scarce, therein place of Landing, wherein, we might say
We could have been secured, for one day.
swiftly, he hath prosecuted there,
vengements, for the bloody Massacre, our dear Brethren ; and, what fair hopes, he such a fates, that fully it aveng'd will be.
great a Mercie, t'was that now the Scot, Re-invading us, prevented not making, in their Land the seat of War ;
Which, they intended should be settled here :
and, what this Blessing is, they truly see,
and feel, this day, where, now, both Armies be.
But, over and above all this, there's, yet another Mercie, which, if we forget to mention, to God's praise, we do amiss :
for, much it will avail us ; and, 'tis this.
the Bloody Irish, whose chief interest, depends upon the, ten horns of the Beast,
(and, Sea of Rome) have with all diligence, endeavour'd for assistances from thence :
nor was there want, in them, of Willingness,
to second their desires ; yet, nay-the-lets,
they have obtained, hitherto, thereby,
no Aid, considerable, or supply :
God, who, our Avenger is become,
hath cast on that Leviathan of Rome,
Chain ; and, Fastned in his Nostrils too,
Husk which hinders what he fain would do.

God

God, likewise, ever since, our wars begun;
(As if, to finde them Work, till his were done)
Hath so distracted ev'ry Christian King,
And ev'ry Commonwealth, near neigh'bouring,
With Jealousies, and discontents at home;
With Wars abroad; Or, with Invasions from Their forraign foes; that, what they would have done
They dar'd not: but, stood, onely, looking on,
To see our Fall; to watch, how we did play
Our Game; and, where, their best Advantage lay
What, but a Providence, and, such a one,
As may ascribed be to God alone,
Could so have tim'd, and Order'd every thing,
That, they, advantages to us might bring?
What, Denmark would have done, their foe, the Swede
Did, by an Act unlooked for, impede.
What, France intended, was made also vain,
By their Domestique fars, and, wars with Spain.
What, Spain, could have been highly pleas'd with
Was hinder'd, both by France, and Portugal.
The Powerful, and wary Netherlanders,
Were grown so jealous, of their own Commanders,
That, though they were unfreindly, at the first,
(And, Countenanc'd our Foes, in what they durst)
Yet, peradventure, seeing (or else fearing)
A mischief, over their own heads, appearing;
They, have not put upon us, worse conditions,
Then, very well became such Politicians.
But, had not God, in season, took from thence,
That rash, and over-much intrusted Prince,
Who, had almost inflav'd them; we, and they,
Or, both of us, had (probably) this day,
Been much imbroyl'd: and, therefore, they, and we Should, for that timely favour, thankful be.
The Portugal, hath had his bridles too,
Retraining him, from, what, he fain would do the Hollander, and Spaniard daily keep his hands in action, and his eyes from sleep;

and that which he hath done in opposition, to us, will but accelerate perdition;
to those whom he secur'd, against our State;
and bring them, to repent, when 'tis too late:
or 'twill but keep our ships abroad, a while,
to shew the world, Gods favour to this Isle;
to make it heed, what work, he hath begun;
to make them know, that, what is left undone, but for triall of their faith; and our;
and, to illustrate so; his boundless power,
that they may be allured to confess,
his love, his wisdom and his righteousness.
And for assurance, that, it shall be thus,
to serve what earnest, God hath given us,
then, we had long time, controverted, here,
our interest; and made the same appear,
in humble pleadings, and by hearty cries,
God against our late Kings tyrannies;
and saw no good success: we brought our cause, according to our ancient English Lawes) before him by appeals. And by the sword,
(the last decision, which those Lawes affoord) offer'd the same, to proof; both parties being, contented, and in that appeal agreeing.
With which, both Drums, and Trumpets thereupon, sounded a Charge; the battells join'd, fell on;
and, God before whose throne our cause was tri'd, victory, gave sentence on our side.
His judgement (not by all, approv'd at first) some traitors, and some friends would have revers'd, and sought to wave it, as a doubtfull triall;
though throughout the world, without deniall,
and throughout all times) even to this day,
such disputes, decided are, this way.

But to assure us, that the sentence came
From God; he, hath, again, confirm'd the same
By seconding that act of providence,
And, making us, victorious, ever since.
Thereto, therefore, adhering; we have thrown
With confidence, the tyrant from his Throne:
Making him also, pay the forfeiture
Of life, our present title, to secure.

And, therein, not alone our Consciences,
Do warrant us, and, all those witnesses
Of providence, which have therein appear'd:
But, to the world, the same is, likewise, clear'd,
By all those pow'rfull Kings, and neighbouring
Who, have observed, how God vindicates (Statutes)
Our cause; and they have now pronounc'd us free,
As we of right, and by Gods verdict be.
For, their Ambassadors, who now reside,
With us, our liberty have justifi'd,
By their acknowledgements; and, witness bear
Thereby, to what Gods sentence did declare:
Yea, by their free concession of the same,
They make themselves as liable to blame
As we; for, if our Nation justly may Be counted Murderers; now so must they:
At least, as accessaries to that deed,
By which we from our servitude, were freed.
If, Righteously, our winnings we possess;
They, are partakers of our righteousnesse,
By those acknowledgements; and, God, shall them
Reward, for their so justifying him:
If they by no sinister actings mar
That blessing, whereto, may, it may appear.
However; we, obliged are to praise
Gods mercie, that we see in our own dayes
Such blossoms of the fruits, which we expect
That, our endeavours have so good effect;

As, that the pow'rfullst Princes of all those Whom we suspected Neutralers (if not foes)
Are so convinced as to mediate
An amicable Juncture, with our State,
In true sincerenesse; or, dissemblers are :
Which, were an evidence of greater fear,
And baseness, then, we either can detect;
Or, shall, without some future cause, suspect.

Oh! what a blindness, what a frowardness,
Doth some of our own Nation, yet possess,
That, other men can so farre off, discern
What, God, hath done for us; and thereby learn
Both to be wise in time, and kisse the son
Before his burning anger is begun,
And yet they, still, continue obstinate :
Grumble at providence, bark at the State,
Like dogs against the moon, and snarl at all
Who will not as they do, good things, miscall.

It may be, such as these, when they shall see
What's here expressed, will be mad at me :
Menace, defame and hate, revile, and curse,
Or, peradventure, mean me, what is worse)
Yea, some who wish me well, may think I might Have wiser been, than, to provoke despight,
Or, needlessly, (as they suppose) engage
Against the violence of brutish rage.
But, I defie that wisdom, which perswades
A private heed, which publick right, invades.
Never yet, an ease, or safety, found
Nought, which to my Conscience, gave a wound.
Already too too many such, now are,
Who either seem ashamed, or, else fear
To own Gods Mercies, or, the publick causes,
Without some reservations, blinds, or pauzes,
To save what interest, which to enjoy,
Unseasonably, themselves, they may destroy.

By this self-love are miseries begun :
 Within this channell, hitherto, they run ;
 By this, we lose Gods love ; by this, we make Our courage feeble, and from others take
 That confidence in us which might engage
 Their faithfullnesse ; and, them to us oblige,
 With willingnesse, to help establish that,
 Which for the Publick-weal, is aimed at.

For my part I intend a resolution,
 To further what we have in prosecution.
 I see Gods mercies, and I understand
 His purpose, in the works he hath in hand :
 And therefore, whosoe're displeas'd shall grow,
 Will publish forth, what of his love I know.
 It is my duty, 'tis my proper call ;
 (If I have any in this world, at all.)
 Yea born I was, (if born I were for ought)
 To do the work, which, I to do have sought :
 And, if my Faculty (such as it is)
 Was given me for ought, it was for this
 Which I am doing, and I will employ it
This way, as long, as I with health enjoy it.
 What ever, I have publickly profest,
 Was really intended ; not in jest.
 Neither for praise, or profit, or to please,
 (Except what frailty doth inject of these) Nor out of contradiction unto those Who shall dislike it, do I this compose :
 And, therefore neither, carnall hopes, or fear
 Shall make, me, my known duty, to for bear.
 For no respect, to Parliament or King,
 Or to my self, have I in any thing
 Dissemblingly, spoke hitherto my thought ;
 Although much mischief on me it hath brought ;
 And I hope never to be frighted from A free expression, whatsoever come.

ut to declare the truth, and speak my mind,
 As often as, I just occasion find;
 In spite of all the spitefull world can do,
 And all the rage of Powers Infernall too.
 And whence springs this my confidence? not from Those grounds, whereby, most men, do now become Courageous in their actings: nor from our Prevailings hitherto: nor from that power
 We have acquir'd: or those advantages,
 Whereby we are made hopefull to possesse
 Our wished ends: nor trust I to th' events
 Of our endeavours, or our best intents:
 For, all these things, although they promise fair,
 May find a change, and leave us in despair:
 In this alone my boldnesse doth consist:
 I see Gods presence, and his interest,
 In all that's done: I have a glimmering, too,
 Of that, which he designs e're long, to do,
 Though yet delay'd: and, therefore, whatso'e're
 Befalls me, am resolv'd to persevere
 In driving on his work, though I should see
 As great a change, as may supposed be.
 Yea should I perish in this Cause, and knew,
 When I were dying not one, thereto true;
 I should, even then believe, that, God, alone
 Would finish that, which he hath now begun;
 And make his glorie, be the better seen
 By those Obstructions, which will intervene.
 Thus, having added somewhat to prevent
 The prejudice, which threatens my intent:
 And sum'd up also, (as my weaknesse could)
 A part of that for which we render should
 Our thanks this day; I purpose to compose
 Some formall Odes of thankfullnesse, for those Who shall desirous be, when they rejoyce,
 To witness their intentions, by the voice.

This, prudent men, thought very pertinent
(And an inseparable complement)

For such a duty: though, fanatick fools,
Who have nor wit, nor musick in their souls,
Perceive nor, with, what good effects we may Use them in our devotions, at this day.

Gods, Prophets, who, knew best what did belong
To praises; did expresse them, oft, in Song,
And, left them written, as the best Records,
To memorize, what present time affords,
Worth recommending to Posterity:
Or, of safe-keeping it in memorie:
For, seeing Hymnes beget no expectation
Of ought proceeding from an inspiration,
Upon emergent cause; but are a story,
Expressing, briefly, to th' almighties Glory,
Matter, of fact, (as that which hath been done,
Lately for us, or many ages gone,
For, others, whose well-being did relate,
To us) those Odes continue still in date;
And should sometimes, repeated be, to show
What, God hath done; that, hopefull we might grow
Of like Protection: and, be comforted
By those examples, when our hopes are dead.
And necessary 'tis, that, those Records
Should be preserved, still, in their first words,
That, future times, a certainty may see
In those things, which commemorated be.
And out of question, (to the end of dayes)
He, who sincerely sings them, to Gods praise,
Shall feel within him (being so dispos'd)
That spirit move, by which they were compos'd.

Therefore, though Scorners, & those dull soul'd things
Whose judgement knows not, whether better sing
The Nightingall or Cuckow, flout me shall,
And in contempt, these Hymnes my Ballads call;

[7]
will not be discouraged by these;
from saying, or, from singing, what I please;
But, in an awfull, Joyfull strain, begin
A song, to usher this dayes praises in.
Yea, in those forms, which are by them abhor'd;
and my household, thus, will praise the Lord.

Sing this as the 100. Psalm.

With aweful Joy, and joyful Fear,
To ianctifie, O Lord, this day,
Before thy Foot stool we appear;
And, our Thank offrings here to pay:
Which though it be no other thing,
Then thy Free-mercies to confesse;
Or, Songs, unto thy praise to sing;
Vouchsafe acceptance, nay-the-lesse.

Within our selves, we are so poor,
That, we have nothing of our own,
But, what we had from thee, before;
Which, by our sins impair'd is grown:
For, our wit, beauty, strength, and health,
(The goods of body, and of mind)
Our time, our honours, and our wealth,
To serve our lusts, have been resign'd.

And, therefore, till thou shalt renew
Thine Image, by our fault defac'd,
We, and our Offrings, from thy view,
Deservedly, may forth be cast.
There is no musick in our Songs,
That's worthy to be heard of thee;
Because, our hearts, eyes, ears, and tongues,
Preplaned, and untuned be.

Yet by those favours, heartned on,
Which were on us bestown, of late,

A Hymn, we joyntly have begun,
To sing this Day, at Mercies gate.
Lord! those eternall doores uncloſe,
Through which thy ſpeciall graces flow;
The cords of our Corruption loſe,
And, let thy Spirit on us blow.

5. Then, ev'ry word, we hear, or ſay,
With ev'ry thing, that's done, or thought
(In celebrating of this Day)
Shall do thee honour, as it ought:
And, they that ſtudy publike harms,
Or, ſhout, what we are doing here,
Shall be ſo bound up, by theſe Charms,
That when they ſhout us, they ſhall fear.

Thus, having by an humble preparation,
Made, firſt, our way to God, for acceptation
Of our intended praiſes; and, that done,
A little meditated thereupon;
Or, exercis'd our thoughts, on other Notions,
Which may be pertinent, to theſe devotions;
We, in a ſecond Canto, will relate
Some heads of that which we commemorate:
And, thus, expreſſe our thankefulneſſe to God,
In exultations, of a higher Mode.

Sing this as the 113. Pſalm.

1. OH God! how good! how kind art thou!
What help, what grace, doſt thou beſtow
On us, in our diſtreſt eſtate!
Our tears to triumphs, thou haſt turn'd,
We now do ſing, who lately mourn'd,
And, by our Foes, were jeered at:
When we were weak, poor and forlorn,
Expos'd to dangers, fears and ſcorn,
Our Comforter, thou didſt become:

And, when we dreaded shame of face;
 Spoils, death, or wounds, joyn'd with disgrace;
 Those fears, we were deliver'd from.

As thou, from base and servile bands,
 And out of cruel Pharoahs hands,

Thine Heritage redeemd'st of old :
 Ev'n so, from those, who sought our harm,
 Thou broughtst us off, with out-stretch'd arm,
 With signs and wonders manifold.

They so, were blinded, Lord, by thee,
 Who, might have seen, but vvould not see;

Nor hear when they were counsell'd well:
 And He that fraud, and force imploy'd,
 To make our Lavvs, and Freedomes void;
 In our own view, like Pharoah, fell.

This is the Day, whereon our Yoke
 Of Norman Bondage, first was broke;

And, England from her chains made free:
 This is the Day, vvhereon the Lord,
 Did manumit us by the sword,

And, 'tis novv signall, by decree.
Slaves, they deserve to be, therefore,
 And to be bar'd for evermore,

The Freedoms of this Commonweal,
 Who shall not thankfull, now appear,
 And vindicate with sword and spear,
 Gods just Replies, to our Appeal.

By thee, our Freedoms, Lord, vve got;
 Oh! to our keeping, leave them not:

But, still their Guardianship retain.
 And, let not those, vvho under thee,
Sub-verters, of those Freedoms be,
 our ins, forfeit them, again :

On th- se alone, that are unjust

Or shall be traytrous in their trust,
 To this Republike, or to Thee,
 Let thy avenging justice fall;
 And, on all those who hinder shall,
 That Peace, with Truth, may settled be:

5. Write in our hearts, thy sacred Law;
 And, let no future failings, draw
 Our former cursed bondage back:
 But, our depraved wills renew,
 And, to thy service, keep us true;
 Which, wil our Freedoms perfect make.
 The Kingdom, Power, and Praise be thine
 As long as Moon, and Sun shall shine:
 Be, likewise, thou our Heritage:
 And, in this Nation, let there be
 No other King, or GOD, but thee,
 What e're they are, who thereat rage.

Warm'd by these Charmes, I do begin to feel
 Another motion, in an higher wheel,
 Inclining my invention, to indite
Expressions, raised to a loftier height;
 That (if it can be done) I may awake
 Some other, in my praises to partake.
 Be silent then; For, I intend a strain,
 That shall reach heaven, and, eccho, down again
 Such repercussions, hither, through the ayre,
 As will within our Foes beget despaire,
 Of their designes; and, those, to us, unite
 In praises, who, in Englands peace, delight:

Sing this as the 148. Psalm, doubling the last strain of the Tunc.

- i. All you, that present are,
 Come, let our hearts, and tongues,
 The Praise of God declare,

In new-Thanksgiving songs;
 Come, let us sing
 strains, that may make, the walls to shake,
 The Roofs to ring:
 Still sounding higher,
 Till thereby, we, with Angells, be Joyn'd in one Quire.

Related, we have heard,
 What he, for us, hath done;
 With how much disregard,
 Our Foes, he looks upon:
 And, we have seen,
 How, he befriends, when righteous ends
 Pursu'd have been:
 VVe, likewise view
 What will befall, to those that shall
 Their lust pursue.

We see, or may behold,
 That, he our Armies leads;
 And (as in times of old)
 His Banner o're them spreads,
 And for our sakes, (heights, through threats and spights, through depths and Their passage makes,
 VVhilst, to his praise their Foes to nought, are justly brought,
 In plainer waies.

He, made both Seas and Wind,
 To them assistance lend;
 And, what they had design'd,
Sun, Moon, and Clouds befriend.
 Force, he repells;
 And them bold, to march where cold,
 And hunger dwells;

And, when their fear
 Did most abound, they mercy found,
 And Victors were.

5. To him doth Praise belong;
 For, he did them subdue,
 Who num'rous were, and strong,
 When we were weak, and few;
 And, when our Foes
 Came bragging on, and thought all won,
 They all did lose.
 Still, be it thus;
 Lord! alway, so, them overthrow VVho malice us.

6. His wise-fore-sight prevents,
 The Politicians wiles:
 He, crosses their intents,
 He, at their Projects smiles:
 In his due time,
 He still unknots, all hidden plots,
 Contriv'd by them:
 And, in that snare,
 VVhich, for our feet, they closely set,
 Still caught they are.

7. Vain sons of men, therefore,
 Your bruitish grumbling cease;
 Pursue false-hopes no more,
 But follow after peace.
 More prudent grow;
 Reform your waies, and sing his Praise
 As now we do:
 Oh! whilst you may
 In God rejoyce, and hear his Voice
 VVhile 'tis to day.

8. Let all men do the same,

Of whatſoe're degree;
And magnifie his Name,
As all obliged be.

His Righteouſneſſe,
His Power and Grace, in ev'ry place

Let all confeſſe:
And lay aſide
their own deſerts, their ſelfiſh hearts,
Their ſtinking pride.

Your ſtrength to him ſubmit,
You, that have conqueſts won:
Wiſe men aſcribe your wit,
To him, ev'n him alone.

For, he ſupplies
the Fool with ſkill, and, when he will Beſools the wiſe.

And, certainly,
into to your Foes, he, gives the blows
By which they die.

Rich-men, your precious things
Bring forth, your Thanks to ſhow;
Before him, (Oh ye Kings)
Your Heads, and Scepters bow;

And, as 'tis meet,
come from your Thrones, and caſt your Crowns
Beneath his feet:

For, Kingdomes all to him pertain, and he again
Reſume them ſhall.

Oh ! let all things that were,
That are, or ſhall enſue;
(Or, but in thought appear)
The praiſe, O God, forth-ſhew;
all Times laſt bound:

And, let it run, when time is done,
An endleſſe Round;

Where

Where, needs not be
Privations Night, that we true Light
May better see.

12. Mean time, let not his praise
Be meerly, in our Voice,
As if vve thought to raise
A Trophy, out of Noise:
But, let us more
Our Thanks expresse, in Righteousnesse,
Then heretofore:
Els (this is plain)
False shows we make, and, do but take GODS Name in vain.

These Hymns I offer up, to be instead
Of some short Chronicle, for them to read,
Who have not means to get a larger Book,
Or leisure-time, long Tracts to overlook.
And many, per adventure, who should els
Never have heard a word, of what this tells,
Shall thereby know it, and thence, take occasion
To magnifie Gods Mercies, to this Nation.

Here J had made an end, but that J find Another Christian duty, which to mind
J must present. All these, forepast Expressions
Of Gods great mercies, and our fair Professions
Of thankfuinesse, but words, or actions be,
Which hypocrites may do, as well as we,
(As to the outward man) and, many times,
By them, that service, best performed seems.
These, are but offerings of our lips, and tongues,
Or exercises of the breath, and lungs,
In which, we formally may act a part,
With little fervor, and without a heart.
If we upon inquiry find it thus,
In those Thanksgivings offered now by us,

verball, and meer corporall oblation.
all be to God, but an abomination.

We, therefore shall do well, when we have ended the publike duties, unto us commended,

(Power supreme) in private, to retire to our selves, and of our hearts inquire how things are there, and whether all be so earnest, as it ought to be, or no.

we perceive a failing, let us, then,
confesse it, as becomes repentant men :

and take occasion, thence, to magnifie Gods love the more, and humbly vilifie our wayes before him, for the favours done, ill, then, most thankfully be thought upon,

when we consider, that, the Grace bestown, is not, without our self-desert, alone :

but, when we rather merited his wrath.

Mercie, by guileinesse, more lustre hath,

and Gods commiseration will appear price greater, when 'tis known, how vile we are.

Oh ! let us therefore, take more care to see,

with what we are, and, what we ought to be,

whom, God, hath so much favour'd : let us know, that we our thankfullnesse are bound to show

as well with other members, as with tongues, and, with what, ever else to us belongs.

We ought to bring a circumcised ear,

not deaf to truth, or, readier to hear false report, then, that which represents the grievances, and wrongs of innocents.

pitifull, and an impartiall eye,

to look upon, the poore mans miserie,

and turn from vanities : well cleansed hands :

active, in executing, Gods Commands :

not to bloodshed swift, but, ordered the paths of Christian holinesse, to tread;

And

And ev'ry other Member, serving to Those duties, which they were ordain'd to do.

Let ev'ry man consider, what, he was;
What, he at this time is ; unto what place
God, hath preferred him: unto what end:
What, he hath done; and, what, he doth intend:
Whether, to other men, he hath done so,
As, he would others, unto him should do.

Whether his Power be faithfully employ'd,
To further that, for which it is enjoy'd;
Or, to enrich himself. Whether, his wealth,
His reputation, wisdom, strength, and health;
Have been improv'd aright; and, whether, he
Is really the same, he seems to be,
By those externall actings, which expresse
His Justice, Piety, and Thankfulness.

For, 'tis not our conformity, to that
Which is this day, commanded by the State;
(Or, other like performances) alone,
That, maketh acceptable what is done.

'Tis not Religion, stew'd into a vapour;
Taking, of Notes, at Sermons, in a paper;
Or, giving sixpence, or, perhaps, a shilling,
Wherein, consists a laudable fulfilling
Of this daies duty: no, beloved Nation,
'Tis Justice, Justice; Bowells of compassion;
Sincereneſſe in your deeds; truth in your hearts;
And, purifying of your inward parts;
Which makes a Sacrifice to be approv'd,
Or Sacrificer perfectly belov'd:

And, 'tis the want of these, that, most estranges
From GOD; and brings the most destructive change

Which, being true, all men (in what they may)
Should to perform the duty of this day,
Be diligent: But most conduce, it shall Unto the Publike-good, in generall;

That such as have chief Power, in either Nation
 Should take themselves into Examination,
 And search, what in them wanteth, to expresse
 A hearty, and unfained thankfulnesse:

Let, therefore those, on whom, at this time, lies
 The greatest Trust, reflect, awhile, their eyes Upon themselves; to make enquirie, whether
 There be not in their publike-actings, either
 Some fallshood, or some failings, which may need
 A Reformation, and a better beed:

Whether, they have not swallow'd, what may choke
 Themselves, at last; Gods, righteous wrath provoke;
 And, frustrate all our former Preservations;
 Our present Joys, and future expectations.

Let them examine, how much, yet, they want
 Of making good their vowed Covenant,
 Not in the Scottish, but the English sense)
 Which hath relation to our just defence,
 And, to that mutuall aid, which, to each other
 We vow'd; when, we were thereby joyn'd together.

Let them examine, whether, they have not
 That part, of their Ingagement, so forgot,
 As, to desert their friends, in th' executions
 Of their just Vow, and, made their Prosecutions
 More mischievous to them, then unto those
 That, were apparently our guilty Foes:
 And, whether, whilst this Lot, on them attends,
 Men, may not cheaper, be truth's foes, then friends.

Let them examine, if there be not some,
 Who to their Counsellis, and Committees come,
 Seldome, or never; but, to set those free
 From Prosecution, who, most guilty be:
 And, whether, many of them, do not know
 Who, these men are, and often, find it so, Much to their grief; because, they are unable
 To hinder, what they know unwarrantable.

Let, them consider, whether, some effects
 Of partiall, and of personall respects,
 Have not. oft times, destroy'd an Innocent,
 The just dooms, of the guilty, to prevent:
 Whether, this Lord, that kinsman, or their friend;
 (Or, he, that can promote their private end)
 This Lady, with the fair bespotted face;
 That gallant, in the suit bedawb'd with Lace;
 Or, seeming Converts, who, perhaps, are come
 To Fine, for means, to mischief us, at home;
 Let them I say, consider whether, these
 Are not receiv'd with more civilities,
 And, with much more respect, then many are,
 Who, from the first beginning of this war,
 Have served faithfully; and ever stood
 Firm, in all Trialls, for the Publike-good.

Let them examine, whether, they and we,
 Partakers, of one Common-Justice be,
 According to our right: Or, whether they Allow not to themselves, what they deny
 To some of us, who, have the self-same Cause;
 And, claim the self-same equity, and Laws.
 Let them examine, whether, none of them,
 Seek opportunities, and watch for time
 How, to surprize their House, to gain a Vote,
 Which, in a full Court, never had been got;
 Because, their motions, had been, then, gainsaid,
 By many, and, their purpose, better weigh'd.
 Let them examine, how, they do pursue
 Their self-denying Votes, which, gave a shew
 Of honorable, and of good intentions;
 Though frustrate, by unlooked for preventions.

Let them examine, if these Common-weals
 Can hope for benefit, by just Appeals,
 Against Oppressors, who shall Office bear,
 When in Supreme Authority they are,

And while they shall be priviledged so,
 That, they may Judges be; and Parties, too,
 In those Appeals; and, how, their bribery,
 Or other injuries, can possibly Be prov'd; where, all Appellants, against these,
 Shall find so many disadvantages
 To struggle through; and while those they impeach,
 Are in a Sanctuary, out of reach.

Let them examine, if the distributions
 Of places, gainfull by their executions,
 Are equally divided; or, bestown
 So frequently, for any merit, known,
 As, for some nigh relation, unto those Who get the power, such places to dispose:
 And, whether, one, may five, or six, deserve,
 Whilst, many of our friends, are like to starve,
 Who, might have been reliev'd; yea, made our debter;
 And, serv'd the Common-wealth, perhaps, much better.

Let them examine, whether, they, who lent
 And, freely gave, till all they had, was spent,
 The Publike to secure; are car'd for, so,
 As they have been, who, sought our overthrow:
 Whether, they see not many more arise
 To speak for them, upon emergencies;
 To represent their seeming-sad conditions;
 To offer, and to second, their Petitions;
 To get Provisoes, pardons, or Reprieves,
 (And, means to keep their children, and their wives)
 Then do for those, when their distresse appears,
 Who, freely, spent their bloud, to save our ears.

Let them examine, whether, some of them
 Do not by their proceedings, both condemn
 And, help destroy themselves; when, in their Choises
 Of Publike-Ministers, they give in Voices,
 Or Names, for by-respects, or kindreds sake;
 Enabling them, Confederacies to make,

For private interest: let them, together
 Take consultation, and examine whether
 They favour not, among them, such as drive
 Those actings on, whereby, they may contrive
 The ruine of our Cause. Let them, moreover,
 Examine, whether, none they can discover
 Who constantly endeavour, to bring in Those, who most worthily, depriv'd have been
 Of their late trust; that, they might them assist
 In strengthening their corrupted interest:
 And, whether, an indulgency to these,
 May not procure some disadvantages
 To that Militia, which, hath been, of late,
 Established, to fortifie the State:

And, let them, if they find it to be so,
 Prevent the mischief, e're it further go.

Let them examine, whether, Avarice,
Ambition, malice, pride, or some such Vice,
 Hath not been so indulg'd, as, that it may Deprive us of the comforts, which this day
 We have in hope: yea, let us all, apart,
 And, joyntly, seek true Peace, with perfect heart.
 These memorandums, I am bold to add,
 That, our Thanksgivings, may be thereby made
 More perfect; and, more acceptable, too,
 By minding, what, we further have to do:
 That, by these Observations, I may keep
 My friends, from singing of themselves asleep,
 In that security, which will destroy
 The truest sweetnesse, of our present joy:
 That, we might save Supreme Authority,
 From that contempt, that blame, and obloquy,
 Which, may be cast upon it, by our Foes,
 Or, by the secret faithlesnesse, of those,
 Who (by pretending for it) have much wronged
 Their Actings, and our miseries prolonged:

d that we may not by our heedlesnesse those things, which will mar our happinesse, wle Elegies, and roar out Lamentations, ead of songs of praise. and Exultations.
 Lord! give thou hereunto, those good events ich, may, in somewhat, answer my intents :
 And, take with acceptation, I, thee pray, is my imperfect, this my weak assay.
 ften thy work, and bring it to conclusion :
 raw us, out of that chaos-like confusion, which we are : As, in our preservation ou hast appear'd, so in our restauration unity, please, likewise, to appear ;
 at, Peace and truth, may keep their dwellings here.
 Let Parliament, and people, from this day,
 ise thee. by Reformation of their way.
 e City, Countrey, and both poore and rich, endeavour with sincerity, as much.
 e our victorious Armie, do the same ;
 tributing unto thy glorious Name their prevaillings ; persevering, still, faithfull executing of thy will,
 and seeking publick-peace without design ought, which may to selfishnesse incline.
 And, make us all, with as much willingnesse, forth thy praises, for the righteou/nesse thy severest Judgements ; as, to sing anks, for those blessings, which thy mercies bring.
 And, my dear countreymen, let me not pray or you in vain : nor sing my songs, this day
 o Beasts, and Rocks, and Mountains, to be heard, as they have often been) without regard :
 If, I have cause to change my joyfull Odes,
 o mournfull Epicedes, and Palinodes.
 ill presaging Raven to this Nation, would not be (croaking of desolation

And sad events) I, rather with the Dove,
 My winged Contemplations, would improve
 To bring such Olive-leaves, as may declare
 Your overflowings, quite abated are :
 But, all that is allow'd by my Commissions,
 Is, only to declare, on what conditions,
 We may have Peace; and, what events, God hath Design'd, both to the right, and left hand path.

Let me not, therefore, whistle to the wind,
 And, emptinesse, in my good wishes find.
 For, why should this day of our visitation
 Be overpassed by this generation?
 Why do the Gentry rage? why murmur so
 The brutish Common people, as they do?
 New Vanities, why do they still devise?
 Themselves befooling every day with lies?
 Though, every dayes, experience doth declare,
 How false their hopes and expectations are :
 If they would learn to love, and to believe,
 God, thereunto, a blest Event should give;
 And make them know, and see (with comfort too)
 What, he is doing, and intends to do.

But I begin to feel within my breast,
 A Rapture, pressing on to be express.
 Oh! hear me therefore, and let none despise
 To heed it : for I'll now sing Prophecies,
 Which (whatsoe're you think) shall be as true,
 As if a wiser man had told them you.
 If you shall (oh ye Brittains) reunite,
 In love, and, but, according to your might,
 Add your endeavours, chearfully, to do,
 What Grace and Reason, will invite you to,
 Your way shall prosper: and, (my soul for yours)
 Neither all earthlies nor Infernall powers,
 Shall able be to make a future rent,
 Betwixt you; or to shake that governme

Which God will settle here : but it shall stand as long, as there is, either sea or land :
 and be renown'd among all other Nations, throughout the world, and through all Generations.

This Island, then, the Darling shall become,
 Not only, of all States in Christendome ;
 but, likewise, of all those within the sound of everie wind, that blows within this Round.
 It shall be made the Magazine of all those things on earth, which men do precious call :
 and, of all vertues, morall and divine,
 that may be found, where Sun and Moon do shine :
 For, God shall take delight, to multiply his blessings on it, and to beautifie our cities, fields, and persons, with each thing, that honour, ornament or peace may bring.

But, if against the Light you shut your eyes ;
 Good counsel, if you frowardly despise :
 If you from God, shall turn away your heart ;
 The way of Justice, and of truth pervert :
 If, timely mercies you neglect to shew
 To those that need (God, having unto you touchsaf'd so many favours, and, protections,
 In your great straights, and manifold afflictions)
 You, shall abuse the powre or trust bestown,
 To set up vain devices of your own,
 Instead of what concerns the throne of Christ ;
 For, this free Nations, lawfull interest ;
 You, shall maliciously pursue a course,
 That, leads away, from better things, to worse :
 When, know your doom, for, here I'll tell it you,
 And speak it out, without Enigmaes too.

God, with a black-sad cloud shall overcast
 Your hopes ; and, on you, breath a sudden blast
 That will shrink up, (before you are aware
 All those fair bloomings, which this day appear ;

Set back your Dials, nip your forward Spring,
Which promised rich harvest fruits, to bring;
And, as his mercies, have exceeding been,
So shall his judgements, when they do begin.

Yea, should you conquer, till, you did not know
Abroad, or, here at home, one able foe.
Should all those Princes, and those powerfull States
Who court you now, prove firm confederates;
Or, should you stand possesse of all their powers,
Of whom, you are, or may be Conquerours;
Yet, mark well this (unlessse, we shall with speed,
Reform some things, which Reformation need:
And with more Courage, with more verity,
More self-deniall, and sincerity,
Witnesse our thankfullnesse (which, by Gods grace,
I hope, will in due time, be brought to passe)
A thing, which no man yet, knows what to call,
(Or whence 'twill come) our hopes endanger shall
Yea, such a thing, as is not yet in thought,
(And which most men will sleight and set at nought
When first it shall appear) will overthrow
Our Glorie, and lay all our honour low,
Till we repent: but, then, we shall arise
From our disgrace again, to be more wile:
And they who in their hearts abide sincere,
Shall see this change, without much harm, or fear.
More, I might say, but, my set time is gone.
Take this, among you; and, Gods will be done,
